At the risk of sounding like an old agin[n]er I note disbelief in the new line, that Liddy was the "boss". He was more likely the pay-master and contact with Creeps, maybe even relaying instructions from them. But the man in charge was, I'm sure, Hunt, partly from his experiences not duplicated by Liddy's FBI or prosecutorial career. I see no reason in this story to distinguish between Creeps and White House. One thing, one objective, one operation. However, this sudden pushing of the line that Liddy was boss serves several purposes: making it seem like the biggest fish did not get away; putting more distance between the abortion and the White House; cutout for CIA (Liddy only one without known previous connection). All of this in addition to his carryings-on also makes the phoney judge look less phoney, much better. HW 1/26/73
